Entropy Solutions reworks its bio-based phase-change materials for new controlled-temperature applications
Microencapsulation of PCMs--and new PCMs--are in the offing

Entropy Solutions (Minneapolis) popped into view several years ago with a family of phase-change materials (PCMs) that offered advantages over competing materials. These PCMs went into the Entropy Solutions Greenbox, a tailored packaging solution for temperature-sensitive pharmaceuticals; that brand, and certain rights to marketing to life sciences applications, were sold to ThermoSafe, a leading supplier of cold-chain packaging for life sciences and other industries; Entropy and ThermoSafe maintain a collaboration (even after ThermoSafe itself was acquired by Sonoco in late 2011). Now, Entropy is branching out with diverse new applications for PCMs, as well as broadening its range of PCM formulations ... CONTINUE>
